"But God. being rich in mercy, because of His great love with which He loved us..." Ephesians 2:4

We are living in difficult times in our nation. The recent police shootings recorded on social media, and the murder of five Dallas policemen have highlighted the presence of division and hatred in many of our citizens. Such evil has always been in this world, but we are enabled to personally see it because of new technology. We can certainly condemn the evil in our midst, but that does little to defeat it. Paul described the evil that is present in every person in the first three verses of Ephesians 2. Then he uses the contrasting conjunction "But God" to demonstrate that evil has already been defeated. It was defeated by God's great love which He demonstrated on the cross. Jesus' death was not a defeat at the hands of evil. It was the act that defeated evil. Sin and death was slain on the cross. Jesus took our death and gave us life in its place. As we proclaim Jesus' death, burial and resurrection, we become part of the solution to evil in our world. The final defeat of evil will take place when Jesus comes again. Let us pray for that day. But in the meantime, let us be busy proclaiming the gospel of love, mercy and grace.
